Meet Mohammed Alturki, the eclectic 29-year-old Kuwaiti self-taught, self-made designer and creative director. Owner and creative director of his website and blog www.number10.com, Mohammed, unknown to himself and to others, started his journey into the world of digital art in 1980, he describes this start as completely "incidental". The simple task of manipulating a photograph required the use of Photoshop, and once plunged into the infinite possibilities, one could create with a simple program, he was absolutely hooked!

Refusing to look at the digital world as anything but an art form, Mohammed strives to show the world that digital design is an undervalued field. People are willing to pay so much for paintings, or any traditional art media, yet the craft of a creative digital artist is highly under-estimated. A digital artist has the power to convey a message using a very simplistic idea, or form. Inspiration is whimsical and coincidental.

Being a completely self-taught designer, his blog serves the purpose of a diary that reflects the experiments of a fascinated soul, exploring a variety of subjects and techniques. On any given day, Mohammed could take photographs of a variety of random objects to create a story, and then he would create the tutorial to teach his fans how he accomplished his desired masterpiece. On another given day, he decides to experiment with creating a print or logo for a client. His options are unlimited, and he won't stop until he gets it right.

On the side note of "getting it right", the story behind the name "iv design" is one of an embarrassed student at his college graduation. When confronted with giving a speech in front of at least two thousand people, he struggled to pronounce the Roman numerals to "Louis XIV" and took the floorwards, yet he kept trying in front of the laughing masses until he finally succeeded. Perhaps his patience and perseverance, both innate traits, separate the artist from others, where he believes that talent alone is never enough and that practice makes perfect, strongly claiming that "You have to learn how to master your work, and become your own pilot!" Documenting his work on his blog has opened up many doors for Mohammed as he is now a teacher and mentor. He has posted many tutorials for amateur artists who share his wonder and fascination with the digital arts, and creates several organized teaching lessons.

Mohammed likes to vary his work, where his designs could easily be interpreted as personal reflections created to inspire others to think outside of the box for he is never afraid to experiment. At the same time, the quality of his work has attracted the eyes of many local bloggers and companies alike looking for new designs that capture their progressive thoughts. After his first hand experience of a realm of infinite possibilities, he would like others to follow suit to pursue their passions. Today he continues to creatively collaborate with a community of digital artists in effort to create awareness and events that would bridge the gap between the local community and fellow aspiring digital artists.
